Geo-strategic View of Mackinder and Spykeman

Part II (1+1-1 System) Geography Hons.
Paper: V
Module: IV
Topic: 4.3

Geo-strategic View of Mackinder

Most outstanding British contribution to political geography came from the geographer-statesman, Halford J. Mackinder (1861-1947). His heartland theory, which in the early twentieth century is still read with interest even today. His famous lecture entitled 'The Geographical Pivot of History' delivered before the Royal Geographical Society (Mackinder, 1904). In this paper, he advanced the view that the Eurasian core which he named as 'Pivot Area' (later as Heartland in 1919).

- inaccessible to sea power and
- possessed the vast capability of becoming a great world power which would be able to dominate the whole world.

The Heartland Theory

In 1919 Mackinder published his book 'Democracy: Ideals and Reality', in which he formulated his heartland theory. Although Mackinder's theory was not unchallenged throughout. His theory is stated in three lines:

- Who rules East Europe, commands the Heartland.
- Who rules the Heartland, commands the World Island.
- Who rules the World Island, commands the World.

World's geographical organization

Mackinder conceived of one landmass which he called the world island, comprising of Europe, Asia and Africa in the heart of one World Ocean. He considered the British and Japanese islands as offshore islands and the islands of the Pacific and Australia, as outlying islands.

Proportion of coverage
	Area	Population
World island	$\frac{2}{3}$ proportion	$\frac{14}{14}$ proportion
Outlying islands	$\frac{1}{3}$ proportion	$\frac{2}{14}$ proportion

In the world island Mackinder pointed out to the existence of two significant areas - an entirely continental pivot-area or heartland and partly continental and partly oceanic area as the inner or marginal region. The world island was surrounded by a shallow ocean, water or under constant motion of the land.

II. POLITICAL STRUCTURES:

(A) EVOLUTION OF POLITICAL STRUCTURES: RASHTRAKUTAS, PALAS, PRATI HARAS, RAJPUTS AND CHOLAS.

Three powerful kingdoms emerged between 750-1200 CE out of the ruins of Harshavardhana's empire in North India. The Rashtrakutas were ruling in the northern Deccan, the Pratihara in Avanti and the parts of southern Rajasthan, and the Palas in Bengal. All the three powers were engaged in a continual Tripartite struggle for the occupation of Kanauj and the domination of Northern India. All the three powers occupied Kanauj in turns, but finally the wars weakened them and led to their decline. The Rashtrakutas were replaced by the Later Chalukyas, the Palas in Bengal were replaced by the Senas and the Pratihara kingdom broke up into a number of small kingdoms. Some of them were ruled by the Rajput Princes. These kingdoms in turn were continuously at war with each other and as a consequence of that when India was threatened by invaders from the north-west, they failed to defend the borders.
